Faire Causative Form

The causative is a grammatical construction with a lazy subject who, rather than performing some action himself, is making someone or something else (agent) do it/make it happen.

General Structure:
Enforcing subject + Faire (conjugated) + main action infinitive + (par) agent + recipient

There are three possible constructions:

Agent only (recipient missing)

Enforcing subject + faire + infinitive of the main action + agent

The enforcing subject makes the agent perform an action.

Français	English
BBarters fait travailler dur ses étudiants.	BBarters makes its students work hard.
Mon chat a fait aboyer le chien.	My cat made the dog bark.
Les oignons me font pleurer.	Onions make me cry.

Recipient only (agent missing)

Enforcing subject + faire + infinitive of main action + recipient
The enforcing subject is making some action being performed on some recipient.

Français	English
Je fais réparer mon lave-vaisselle.	I'm having my dishwasher repaired.
Tu fais nettoyer la chambre.	You are having your room cleaned.
Elle fera faire sa robe de mariée.	She will have her wedding dress made.
Nous faisons laver la voiture.	We are having the car washed.

Agent and Recipient

Enforcing subject + faire + infinitive of main action + recipient + par + agent
The enforcing subject is making the agent do something to the recipient.

Français	English
Je fais nettoyer ma chambre par ma sœur.	I'm having my room cleaned by my sister.

Ils ont fait tondre leur pelouse par le jardinier hier.	They had their lawn mown by the gardener yesterday.
Nous faisons garder les enfants par Joshi Mastar.	We are having the kids watched by Joshi Mastar.

Se Faire : The Reflexive Causative

The causative can be used reflexively (with a reflexive pronoun) to indicate that the subject has something done to himself or asks someone to do something to/for him.

Français	English
Antoine s'est fait virer.	Antoine got himself fired.
Ne fais pas trop confiance aux commerces en ligne, tu vas te faire arnaquer !	Don't trust online businesses too much, you will get ripped off!
Si vous continuez à prendre de tels risques, vous allez vous faire tuer.	If you continue to take such risks, you are going to get yourself killed.
