(Not) Pronouncing the 's' in Plus

The general rule is straightforward: when the implied connotation is positive, the 's' is pronounced, whereas when the connotation is negative, the 's' is not pronounced.

When to pronounce 's' in Plus

When Plus is used as a mathematical sign (+), the 's' is pronounced.

Français	English
Cinq plus cinq égale dix.	5 plus 5 equals to 10.
Un plus deux égale trois.	One plus two equals to 3.

Generally, when 'plus' is used in the sense of 'to have more of something,' the final 's' is articulated.

Français	English
Elle voudrait plus de vin, s'il vous plaît.	She would like more wine, please.
Il faut travailler plus pour gagner plus d'argent.	One must work more to earn more money.

If it is used in a comparison and precedes an adjective starting with a vowel or a mute 'h,' the 's' of 'plus' is pronounced as 'z.'

Français	English
Elle est plus intelligente que moi.	She is more intelligent than me.
C'est l'expérience la plus horrible.	It is the most horrible experience.

When plus is at the end of a sentence and means "more"

Français	English
Tu devrais étudier plus.	You should study more.
Je déteste ça encore plus.	I hate that even more.

When NOT TO pronounce “s” in plus

When “plus” means “not anymore”, “no longer” or no more”, you generally don’t pronounce the final “s”

Français	English
Je ne veux plus de pizza.	I don’t want any more pizza.
Il n’y habite plus.	He no longer lives there.

When you use “non plus”, the s is not pronounced

Français	English
Tu ne regardes pas le film. Moi non plus.	You aren’t watching the film. Neither am I.
Claire n’aime pas le jazz. Pierre non plus.	Claire doesn’t like jazz. Neither do Pierre.

When “plus” is used in a comparison and precedes an adjective starting with a consonant, “s” is not pronounced

Français	English
Tu es plus gentille que ta sœur.	You are kinder than your sister.
Nous sommes plus grands qu’eux.	We are taller than them.